HISTORY

F-orward our backstory on

Back in 1993, graphic designer brothers Markus and Daniel Freitag were on the look-out for a messenger bag. Zurich citizens worthy of the name travel by bicycle - 'velo,' they call it. When it rains, they get wet. The FREITAG brothers wanted a heavy-duty, functional and water-repellent bag to carry their designs.

Inspired by the cheerfully coloured lorries rumbling along the cross-Zurich highway just in front of their flat, they cut a messenger bag out of an old truck tarpaulin. As the carry belt, they used second-hand car seat-belt webbing, while an old bicycle inner tube provided the edging.

PRODUCTION

From Truck Till Bag

F-orward the process on

Giving used materials a new life is called "recontextualizing" at FREITAG. Whereas similar reincarnations such as From Frog Till Prince or the Cinderella upcycling do not reveal exactly how the transformation process happened and thus leave consumers in the dark, we want to lay our cards on the table.

The Process

Transforming used truck tarps into highly functional, unique bags takes place in five highly complex stages at the F-actory:

RAW MATERIALS

CUTTING THE TARPS

WASHING
